

Senior Project
Final Reflective Essay

Reflect on the process of your project in a well-organized essay, using the following prompts to guide your writing:

- Summarize the process from conception to completion. Be sure to include obstacles you faced, and how you faced them.
- Discuss two important lessons you learned about the content of your project. If your project focused on the homeless in Sacramento, for example, what two things did you learn about the homeless in Sacramento? Be sure to connect these lessons to your future plans for involvement in your community.
- Explain what you would do differently, given the opportunity to do this all over again from start to finish. Be honest. Nobody believes the person who says everything was perfect and you wouldn't change a thing.
- Explain what lessons you have learned about yourself from this process. Be sure to connect these lessons to your future plans for involvement in your community.

Within this reflection, make it clear how you will connect this project to your life outside of high school (yes, that life is approaching quickly). Also, be sure that this demonstrates your best writing, as we will be evaluating this essay not only for the thought, but for the elements of writing as well. See grading rubric for more details.

Senior Project
Final Reflective Essay

Reflect on the process of your project in a well-organized essay, using the following prompts to guide your writing:

- Summarize the process from conception to completion. Be sure to include obstacles you faced, and how you faced them.
- Discuss two important lessons you learned about the content of your project. If your project focused on the homeless in Sacramento, for example, what two things did you learn about the homeless in Sacramento? Be sure to connect these lessons to your future plans for involvement in your community.
- Explain what you would do differently, given the opportunity to do this all over again from start to finish. Be honest. Nobody believes the person who says everything was perfect and you wouldn't change a thing.
- Explain what lessons you have learned about yourself from this process. Be sure to connect these lessons to your future plans for involvement in your community.

Within this reflection, make it clear how you will connect this project to your life outside of high school (yes, that life is approaching quickly). Also, be sure that this demonstrates your best writing, as we will be evaluating this essay not only for the thought, but for the elements of writing as well. See grading rubric for more details.